Kia Mātau – Kia Māori- Kia Tu Rangatira Ai

Weekly sharing of our academic learning in te taiao - The fascinating world of Māori navigation, exploring how our tupuna traversed vast ocean distance without modern aids.

Boston and Matu Rangi- How did Maori navigate across the pacific?

Maori were skilled navigators who used sophisticated traditional knowledge to travel long distances across the Pacific Ocean long before the invention of modern navigation tools. They relied on wayfinding techniques passed down orally through generations, using the stars, ocean swells, wind patterns, cloud formations, and the flight paths of birds to guide their waka hourua.

John, Julie, Kahurangi- How did Māori navigate across the Pacific?

In the early 1200's Māori started voyaging from all across Polynesia, a common place of origin is known as Hawaiki. Māori used the natural environment to find their way across the ocean using things like currents and winds. A main tool used in navigating is te kapehu whetu or the star compass.

PAERANGI

Congratulations to Natalie, Ngākupenga, and Narima of ĀIŌ Jewellery, who were selected as one of eight Northland teams to present their business pitch at the Young Enterprise Mid-Year Celebration held at NorthTec. The team showed great courage in sharing their kaupapa in front of an audience of over 50 people, including students from other colleges.

It was also announced that both ĀIŌ Jewellery and Ngā T Clothing—led by Julius, Tyrecce, and Jerome—have been awarded seed funding through the latest Northland Young Enterprise round. While funding amounts are to be confirmed, this support will help them bring their products to life, just in time for the YES Northland Trade Fair at the Kerikeri Markets in August.
